

🇬🇧 SSSSB Story 039a: The Elephant and the Hourse in the Forest [5-12 years]

In a beautiful forest lived an elephant and a horse. They were good friends.
One day, they sat under a tree and talked in animal language.

Elephant said: "Horse, I don't understand something. People are smart. They know what is right and what is wrong. But still, they sometimes make bad choices."

Horse asked: "What do you mean, dear Elephant?"

Elephant said: "Some people get angry too quickly. Sometimes they say unkind things. They put animals in cages and zoos. They eat animals, even though plants are good and healthy too."

The horse thought for a moment. Then he said gently: "You're right, Elephant. But let's not be angry at people. Maybe they just don't understand yet. Let's do something beautiful: Let us think Positive!"

Horse explained: "That means: only think good thoughts. Only listen to good things. Only look at what's beautiful. And try to do good yourself too."

Elephant smiled: "What a lovely idea, friend Horse! I'll do that too. I won't complain or gossip anymore. I'll show people the good side of me."

They closed their eyes and breathed gently, they felt something warm in their hearts — the light of love and understanding.

Question and Heart-Work: What would good things you say about animals when you talk with friends?
