

One sunny afternoon, a child was walking home with three ripe mangoes.

"Yum!" said the child. "I will eat one mango now because it looks so sweet and juicy!" The child happily ate the first mango.

Then the child looked at the second mango and said, "I will save this one for tomorrow." Next, the child looked at the third mango and said, "And I will keep this one for the day after tomorrow."

Just then, a funny little monkey named Momo jumped down from a tree.

"Oooh! Mangoes!" said Momo, "May I have one?"

The child laughed. "No, Momo! These are mine!"

A little farther down the road, the child saw a hungry family sitting under a tree. A small boy in the family whispered, "I'm so hungry."

The child looked at the two mangoes.. then at the family.. then back at the mangoes. Momo watched quietly from a branch.

The child remembered what the SSSSB Gurus teach: "When we share with love, we help God's children."

After thinking for a moment, the child walked over and said, "Please take these mangoes. I would like to share them with you."

The family's faces lit up with joy. "Thank you!" they said. The small boy smiled from ear to ear.

The child felt warm and happy inside, even happier than after eating the first mango.

Suddenly, Momo the monkey started clapping his little hands. "Bravo! Bravo!" he shouted. "You discovered the sweetest mango of all!" "Which mango is that", asked the child.

Momo grinned. "The mango of sharing!"

Question: Do you also share something you have with others? What do you share?

Heart-work: This week, practice sharing something, such as food, time, kindness, or help, with someone in need. Share your experience, how did you feel?
