

Two girls in grade 9 - Girl A and Girl B - were discussing their future.

Girl A said with determination: "I want to start my own business one day. Working for a boss doesn't appeal to me."

Girl B shook her head: "I think working for a boss is better. Having your own business is too much hassle. My parents have a business, and they hardly have time for us. They never play games like tangram, dominoes, jump rope, Connect Four, Uno, magic cube, Scrabble, or stack-high with us."

Girl A said, "I'll handle things differently. I'll manage the work properly and still have time for family and fun."

The girls almost began to argue, but then decided to seek guidance from Guru Practice.

At Guru Practice, Girl A said: "Guru Ji, please tell her that owning a business is more fun."

Girl B quickly added: "No, Guru Ji, please explain that working for a boss is less stressful."

Guru Practice smiled and gently said, "The most important thing is not what you do, but how you do it. Whether you own a business, work for a boss, serve as a Prime Minister, teach in a classroom, or do any other work – do it with love, honesty, and kindness. When these values guide your actions, every path becomes meaningful".

The girls bowed their heads, understanding the wisdom. On the way home, Girl B - who had been against the idea – turned to Girl A and said: "May be one day, we should start a business together."

And that's what they eventually did. Their business became a great success, not because of profit alone, but because they applied the lesson of Guru Practice – working with disciplines, respect, and love from the very day.

Question: Do you believe success depends more on what you do or how you do it? Why?

Heart-Work: In your daily life - whether studying, helping at home, or playing with friends – practice doing it with love and honesty. After some time, share your experiences.
