

Sumit (15) and Bibek (15) were best friends. On their way home after school, they often dreamed big.

Sumit said: One day, when I have everything, I'll do great things for the world.

Bibek replied: Yes! When I'm grown up, rich, and successful, then I'll help people.

One Saturday, they were walking together. On the way, they happened to pass by a SSSSB gathering and decided to enter. There, the SSSSB-guru gave a beautiful talk about selfless service and practicing values — not in the future, but right now.

Guruji said: "Don't wait until you are grown up, successful, or rich. Start now! Because you already have more than enough to begin. Don't wait until you are successful ! Because success is waiting for you and it will come to you if you do good karma. Don't wait until you are rich either! Wealth is also waiting to come to you, once you serve with love."

The guru said: "Even small acts, connected to values, help you become successful in every aspect of life."

These words touched Sumit and Bibek deeply. They realized how much time they had wasted waiting for the "right moment." Bibek thought: "We're already 15... why dint we start when we were 5? Even Bhakt Prahlad began at 4.5"

From that day, they changed. They began acts of loving service:

- Helping parents and elderly neighbors
- Cleaning litter in their neighborhood
- Sharing lunch with classmates
- Visiting the sick and lonely
- Speaking kindly, seeing good in others and working on their own faults

Their good actions inspired others. Even school principal and the mayor of their city said: "These boys remind us: real change begins when we serve with love."

One day Bibek said: "Guruji was right. We didn't have to wait! We should have started on our fifth birthday." And Sumit said: "In my next life, I hope Guruji reminds me early, in case I forget."

They had only attended one SSSSB class, but they began practicing right away. Soon, they became examples for everyone—showing that even small acts of love can brighten the world each day.

Question and Heart-Work: What Seva opportunities do you have right now in your current situation? Are you already using those Seva chances?
