

Once upon a time, there was a cheerful land, there lived a king and a queen. They were looking for someone to make important decisions about the schools.

But they had one important condition: this person must have attended an SSSSB class before, because only such a person would understand the lessons of love, kindness, and respect.

The king and queen asked all the people in the country to search for such a person.

They searched everywhere, from one side of the country to the other. Some walked, some rode bicycles or scooters, some rode horses, some went by car, and some even flew in a helicopter or traveled by boat.

But, they could not find any SSSSB class and any SSSSB student in the country.

After three days, everyone came back tired, thirsty and a little sad.

The king and queen said: "In our country there is no one from an SSSSB class. We must find an SSSSB member from another country."

They asked a special team to write down all the SSSSB classes in the world, with the names of their family members, in a big book.

The king and queen opened the book, and suddenly their eyes sparkled.

"Look! There is a name here... and it is yours!"

The trumpets played, the drums rolled, and the parrots in the palace shouted, "Sairam! Sairam!"

The king and queen smiled: "You are chosen to decide everything at school. Because in God's creation, every child is equal, every voice matters, and kindness is the greatest subject of all."

Question and Heart-Work: What do you think is the most important for children? What would you change in the classroom, playground, garden, and gym? (Be kind, play fair, learn together, eat healthy, etc.)
