

There was a small boy of 7 who lived with his grandparents. His parents worked far away from the village, earning money just to pay for his education. The grandparents cared for him lovingly sending him to school every day, preparing food, and washing his clothes.

But the boy did not understand their hard work. He often demanded chocolates and expensive toys. His grandparents tried their best to fulfill his wishes, hoping that one day he would realize their love and sacrifices.

One morning, while walking the boy to school, the grandmother met another parent. She smiled and said: "Do you know, my son and daughter go to the Shri Sanjay Sai Soul Blossom [SSSSB] class every week? There, gurus teach children to be calm, kind, and respectful. These classes help children grow spiritually. Most importantly, they learn to be happy with what we have.

They play joyful games also, enjoy creative activities, receive gifts on birthdays and when they complete Heart-Works. All of this happens in a loving, caring environment guided by their gurus."

Hearing this, the boy's eyes sparkled with excitement—he too wanted to join in the fun and receive gifts. He turned to his grandmother and said, "Please send me too! I want to join the SSSSB."

The grandparents were happy. The next Saturday, they took their grandson to the SSSSB class for the very first time.

Question and heart-work: What would you tell to this new friend and his grandparents so that he can continue the class?
