

🇬🇧 SSSSB Story 024a: SSSSB Boy Brings Value to New School [5-12 years]

In Matadi, DR Congo, there was a small boy. Every Saturday, he loved going to the SSSSB class. There he sang bhajans, listened to stories, played games, and learned human values. Most importantly, he practiced what he learned—being calm, kind, and respectful.

His boy shifted to new place along with his parents. In the new school, everyone noticed his gentle nature - polite to teachers, kind to classmates, and helpful to younger children.

One evening, the boy told his mother: "Mummy, my new school is good, teachers are loving. But here there is no SSSSB class where I can learn good things, that I used to do in Matadi."

Hearing this, the mother called the SSSSB guru and told what the boy felt.

The wise guru directly spoke with the school principal. The principal said: "Madam, I never knew about SSSSB Programme earlier! Tell me more—how does it help children grow?" The guru explained patiently. Soon the Principal said: "Now I understand where the new boy's good character comes from. This programme is wonderful!"

The Principal said: "With your support, I will start this classes in my school—for all my students!"

In the new school garden lived a mischievous monkey named Koko. Whenever the children sang bhajans, Koko clapped his hands and tried to sing along - "oo-oo, aa-aa!" During games, he would run off with the ball, making everyone laugh before bringing it back. And when the children listened to stories, Koko sat quietly, pretending to be the "best student," nodding his head like he understood everything.

Soon, teachers and parents noticed wonderful changes in many children: They became more focused in their studies. They became kind, respectful to teachers. They even helped their parents at home.

And thanks to Koko's funny antics, the classes were not only full of values but also full of laughter.

Question and Heart-Work: What is one good thing you learned that you can practice to inspire your friends?
