

Once upon a time, there was a boy named ArawMoto. [Araw=Nepal boy and Moto=Congo boy] He loved playing games and doing indoor activities like coloring and board games. But most of all, he loved playing outside—so he could run, jump, and move freely!

His biggest dream was - to buy the big sports and games box from the toy shop! Inside the box were: a ball, jump rope, mini tennis set, checkerboard, sand timer, coloring markers, game booklets, and all kinds of games from around the world.

The box cost 5 dollars, and ArawMoto had already saved 4 dollars. Every day, he looked at the box and whispered: "I wish I could buy it..."

One day, he asked the shop lady: "Madam, may I take the box? I have 4 dollars."

She replied: "No, young boy. You can only take the sports and games box when you have 5 dollars. You're still missing one."

ArawMoto felt sad. He needed to be patient and keep saving.

Question and Heart-Work: What would you do if you had 4 dollars but needed 5? How would you try to get that last dollar?
